Careful Watchfulness

If the market is the big factor in this business. Was there ever a truer maxim quoted than that of "Well bought is half sold?"

It's an old saw, but it saws just the same today as it did of yore—more so.

This is what comes of watching the market every day. These things come to us just in time, as we try to have them come, just at the time when you will appreciate their coming most, but now for the story of the store.

30-in. French Imported All-Wool Challies, 39c.

Not in your day or ours has there been such challies at 39c, you have paid 60c of late years oftener than you've paid 50c, particularly so for full varieties like this showing represents today. Persian down to neat plain styles, plenty of blue and white, black and white and helio and green designs on taunish and greyish backgrounds. How folk who know those high class French challies best will appreciate these at 39c.

NEWPORTVILLE.

Mrs. Charles Slemmer was visiting in Philadelphia on Sunday.

Mayor Weaver's first wedding fee was from a couple from Byberry.

Samuel Lewis and wife, of Eddington, were visiting in this place on Sunday.

Edward Kershaw, of Bristol, was a Sunday visitor at the residence of Joseph Wood.

Miss Bertha Davis, of Philadelphia, was visiting Miss Flo Rose on Saturday and Sunday.

A stranger upon making inquiry the other day of a farmer as to where a certain party lived, was thus informed: "You go up this road about two miles, and it is the fourth place on the right. There you will find a woman baking bread, yelling at the top of her voice at a half frightened husband, looking out of the window every five minutes to see what her neighbor is doing and occasionally giving a lecture on 'Woman's Rights.' My brother lives there. Good day sir, good day."

The path from the Grundy farm is being put in shape again, which affords a dry walk for pedestrians and an excellent bicycle path. Mr. Grundy goes to this expense every season, and his kindness and generosity is highly appreciated by the traveling public. It is to be hoped that carriages will not be driven on the path and cut full of ruts as has been the case before. A sober man will not drive on it if he is a gentleman, but a man full of John Bailey corn is liable to do most anything unreasonable. But if he is caught in the act he will be sober enough before he has a chance to repeat this mean contemptible act.

Now that the Good Roads Bill has been made a law, there is some encouragement that we will have good roads. Good roads will invite strangers to our township and land will increase in valuation. Farmers can then haul large loads of hay to Philadelphia and Trenton with two horses with more ease than they now can with four. Good roads will bring purchasers of land to this section of the country and farm lands will bring exorbitant prices. The building of roads will give employment to the unemployed, will be a benefit to the country merchant and will be a boon to the real estate men. In a few years Bucks county will hardly know itself all from the effects of good roads.

Ex Supervisor C. T. Headley is making considerable improvements to his property, and is fencing in the lot recently purchased by him upon which stood the hair cloth factory and glue works. Mr. Gostave Staake, the proprietor of this establishment, did an immense business at this stand several years ago and employed about 30 hands. Part of the buildings were occupied at one time by George and Samuel Goslin who did a thriving business manufacturing machinery and carriages of every description. At that time this place was one of the busiest business centres in Bucks county. Both mills at this place did a good business and all kinds of trades were brisk.

The wedding of Miss Mamie Bilger and George Rapp took place Wednesday, April twenty-second, her grandfather's seventy-second birthday. The bride was beautifully gowned in white satin. About fifty friends and relatives were present.

Little Howard Eschbach, a bright grandson of Mr and Mrs. Asa Smith, has always been a mystery to many of us. He learned to walk at the usual age and to do all the other things babies do, but he was unable to talk. He is now past two years and only says a few words. One day last week his parents found he was tongue-tied. The little fellow will no doubt soon be able to make up for lost time.

On the same night a surprise party was to have been given Mr. and Mrs. Longhurst.

What a Godsend that freak libel bill would be to certain corrupt Bucks county politicians who stand in fear of publicity. It is infamous that all reputable journals should be made to suffer for the virulent blackguardism of one Philadelphia paper and the newspaper men have it in their power to get even this fall.

By the way, the scribblers should all feel grateful to Webster Grim, who made such a fight in the Senate for the freedom of the press.

News of the County

Special Correspondence from Near-by Towns

DOYLESTOWN.

A meeting of the Principals Association was held here on Saturday. The only matter discussed at length was a uniform course of study for the schools. Nothing definite was decided.

The annual meeting of the Bucks County School Directors Association will be held on Tuesday May 5. The programme provides for the usual discussions of school topics from the standpoint of the Director. Morning and afternoon sessions will be held and officers will be elected for the ensuing year.

The Doylestown and Easton Trolley Company is pushing work on the route north of Pipersville, the present terminus. About 300 men started work last week between Riegelsville and Easton, but much expensive construction is to be done and it is not likely that the line will be in operation this summer. At the park near Pipersville carpenters have been erecting a dancing pavilion and other attractions which will draw large crowds to that beautiful locality this season.

The annual concert of the Doylestown Choral Union was held last Friday evening. It was the most successful concert in the history of the organization. Lenape Hall was crowded to the doors. Many people from the lower section of the county were present. The music was excellent, the programme including special numbers by Philadelphia singers. The floral decorations about the stage and the large chorus of some 60 people were in themselves an interesting feature of the occasion.

The Committee appointed by the Bucks County Historical Society to inspect plans of competing architects met in Philadelphia on Saturday when plans submitted by Horace Trumbauer, a leading Philadelphia architect, were accepted. The building designed by Mr. Trumbauer is a long, one-story structure, with Colonial features. A. Oscar Martin, of Doylestown, was also a competitor and his plan for laying out the grounds, walks, etc, was accepted. The site chosen is on Pine street in the vicinity of the county prison.

Dr. James E Groff, of Doylestown, Medical Inspector for the county, went to Fallsington on Friday under instructions from the State Board of Health to inquire into the sanitary precautions taken to prevent the spread of smallpox, which exists there. He found two cases in one family and three in another. A case of diptheria was also reported near Morrisville. All the patients are convalescent. If the instructions of the Inspector are observed it is not likely the disease will spread.

Town Council held an extended meeting on Monday evening, several important matters receivig consideration.

Senator Grim asked for a survey looking to the extension of Hamilton street. The Street committee will confer with him in the matter.

A petition signed by many citizens requested Council to pass an anti-spitting ordinance. The ordinance will be prepared by the Solicitor and a committee.

The various committees were appointed for the ensuing year.

JUDGE YERKES ENDORSED

The Democratic County Committee assembled here on Monday and gave the Yerkes Judicial boom a big boost. Glowing tribute was paid to the Committee's favorite. May 18 was selected as the date for the Judicial convention. The following are the resolutions endorsing Judge Yerkes and urging him to be a candidate, which were presented by former Burgess Johnson, of Bristol, and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The election of President Judge for Bucks county will occur this year, and

Whereas, The Bar of the county has unanimously declared that "good judges be retained in office," and at a meeting to advocate the election of Hon. Harman Yerkes for Judge of the Supreme Court unanimously adopted the following resolution, drafted and presented by a committee comprising Messrs. Applebach, Lear, Ryan, Ommeren and Murfit, namely:

"Whereas, The name of the Hon Harman Yerkes, President Judge of this judicial district, will be presented at the Democratic State Convention as a candidate for the nomination by the Democratic party; therefore Resolved, That the Bar Association of Bucks County hereby expresses its cordial indorsement of the candidacy of Judge Yerkes, and its recognition and appreciation of the intellectual gifts and sterling worth which so eminently fit him for place in the highest judicial court of the Commonwealth. In the prime of life, endowed with rare judicial qualities, learned in the law, of ripe judicial experience covering a period of more than fifteen years with a record in public and private station unsullied and beyond reproach, he combines all the qualifications of the ideal judicial candidate, and if called to the wider sphere of public usefulness he would bring to the discharge of its responsibilities the dignity, ability and integrity of purpose which they demand;" and

Whereas, during the term, about to close, of Judge Yerkes upon the bench, the county statements show that while the total annual expenses of the county have increased nearly $30,000, the whole cost per year of carrying on the business of the Courts has fallen from $15,860 to $8,667.39, making an annual saving to the taxpayers of nearly one-half the former expenses and equivalent to more than $70,000 for the term of ten years, and the economy, efficiency and promptness with which Judge Yerkes has discharged his duties is regarded with general satisfaction by the people of the county, and we believe there is a strong feeling in favor of his remaining as presiding judge.

Resolved, That we regard the foregoing resolution of the Bar as true now as when adopted, and are of the opinion that it applies as well to the County Judge as to a Supreme Judge, and therefore, considering also the contrast of maintaining the Courts with the other expenses of the county it is the sense of this convention, without having any intention to affect the action of the Judicial Convention, that the best interests of the county and tax-payers call for the re-election of Judge Yerkes, and for his nomination as the candidate of the Democratic Convention, and if nominated he should accept and become a candidate for re-election.

The Committee also endorsed Hall, of Elk county, for State Chairman.

COURT PROCEEDINGS.

April term of civil court began on Monday but owing to the settlement of many cases and continuance of others the business was completed early Tuesday morning. A case that excited some interest was one in which Elmer A. Harwick, of Milford, was plaintiff. Harwick sought to have his mother ejected from his residence. Mrs. Harwick testified that in consideration of the small price paid for the farm which was formerly her husband's she was to have rooms in the house, but the son made her life very unpleasant, even refusing to let her have wood hauled to the premises during the winter. The jury soon returned a verdict for the defendant.

The next case had to do with the assignment of an insurance policy and involved legal complications apt to occur at any time and which it might be well for people to note. Suit had been brought to recover the amount of an insurance policy on the buildings of the farm of George F. Matthews, near Aquetong, by Henry C. Shepherd and Asher Mattison, executors of the will of Annie E. Shaw, deceased, from the Farmers' and Mechanics' Mutual Insurance Association of Bucks County. The deceased held a mortgage on the Matthews farm and the mortgagee had assigned the insurance policy to the deceased as collateral security. The buildings were insured for $1200 and were destroyed by fire August 26, 1901. A committee was appointed and assessed the amount of loss at $825, which the executors of Miss Shaw claimed was due the estate with interest. A note had also been given the deceased for $300 by George F. Matthews and Mattie Matthews, on May 31, 1899.

Hugh B. Eastburn, attorney for the defendant company, admitted the amount of the loss and stated the company did not care to pay over the money to either party until it had been settled who should receive it.

Henry O. Harris, for the plaintiff, offered the insurance policy and assignment in evidence which was objected to by Henry Lear, representing Mr. Matthews, on the grounds that the assignment did not specifically state for what purpose it was given as collateral and argued that the estate could only recover the amount of the note and interest. The Court sustained Mr. Lear's objection and in accordance with instructions the jury returned a verdict for $334 in favor of the executors of the Annie E. Shaw estate, plaintiffs.

J. K. Bougher, of the J. W. Paxson Sand and Foundry Supply Company, of Philadelphia, was a business visitor here on Monday. The Paxson Co. has purchased of D. J. Matlack, whose residence is Langhorne, his seventy-eight acre farm here in the borough, being the same land formerly owned by the late John Burton. This land lies north of the railroad near the western end of the borough. Jacob Davis expects to continue his work in the employ of the new land owners.

It is the purpose of the Paxson Company to gradually transfer all their Burlington Island business to their Tullytown farm since the island has been largely cleared of sand and the ground there is needed for the extensive improvements to be added to the park. To facilitate rapid loading of the sand a siding will be laid from the Pennsylvania railroad up along the north end of the pine swamp to the hill below the canal.

Finding that the household did not return on Tuesday evening as early as they had promised a certain West Main Street Jersey bull, of well known butting propensities, thought he would go down to meet the ten o'clock trolley. So he overturned the barnyard gate and when outside he discovered that the woodshed was almost out of kindling wood then he promptly split all that will be needed for some time to come, using for a base all the chicken coops, dog houses and barrels that were convenient. The next we hear of him is when the terrified trolley motorman reported to the conductor that a bear was on the track straight ahead, facing the front, all ready to charge, a gatling gun was wished for. As the car had arrived at the point for the party to alight they did so, but as soon as the animal was sighted all the ladies of the party straightway broke the rapid fence-vaulting records, while one of them called from the field to the conductor to hold the car till all danger was past. But the little Jersey after hearing his master's voice merely gave whisk of his tail and ran back to his proper quarters.

Ebenezer Chambers was buried in the stone grave yard on Sunday afternoon Many people attended the funeral of the young man. The trolley road that is being built to Newtown is being pushed forward as fast as possible. About fifty Italians are at work on the cut that is being made on the Nickleson Hill. Harry White, young son of William White, of Yardley, lost an eye Saturday as the result of his experimenting with some dynamite cartridges which he found near his home. He tried exploding them with blows from a hammer and was much more successful than he anticipated he would be. Part of the contents of one of the caps struck him in the face and one of his eyes was torn out. The injured boy was taken to a Philadelphia hospital for treatment.

The courtesies that are extended to the patrons of the Yardley and Morrisville trolley road are not of a nature to induce a willing patronage. The conduct of some of the passengers and their conversation would not be tolerated on any other road that knew its business, for a moment, and it should not on this road. When persons ride on a car they expect to have a pleasant transportation, for which they pay, and the road that does not give this to its patrons lays itself open to serious criticism. The women who were passengers on the last car from Trenton on Saturday night were forced to listen to a conversation that was picturesque, but, without doubt, very unpleasant and extremely embarrassing. This is the usual thing on this late car, as it carries a lot of persons who have lingered "where the wine flows red" and as is always the case with such people, they are very talkative, setting their conversation off in the most brilliant style, by frequent oaths. It can be truthfully said that the crew on this particular car were very kind and courteous. They endeavored to abate the nuisance and did to a certain extent, but the company should take a firm position in the matter, and it would assuredly gain by such a stand as many of the residents of the town would more willingly patronize the road if such an improvement in the conduct of the rougher element were made. Another improvement that could be made to an advantage is the transportation of the workmen in a car for that purpose, and not pack them in with passengers who are much adverse to the odor that lingers around a lot of Italians.

"For years when spring time came on and I went into gardening, I was sure to have an attack of rheumatism and every attack was more severe than the preceding one," says Josie McDonald, of Man, Logan county, West Va. "I tried everything with no relief whatever, until I procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and the first application gave me ease, and before the first bottle was used I felt like a new person. Now I feel that I am cured, but I always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm in the house, and when I feel any symptoms of a return I soon drive it away with one or two applications of this liniment." David B. Hill has never been nominated for the presidency, but he has been announced and announced himself as candidate for the nomination a great many more times even than Mr. Bryan.

The U. S. fish commission is sending out millions of future game fish for stocking the rivers and small streams of the country—shad, pike, perch, salmon, trout and black bass. Particular attention is being paid to the stocking of virgin streams with black bass for which many hundreds of requests have been received.

Immediate revision of the tariff is the Democratic platform announced by ex-Senator Hill of New York, although he knows that even should the Democrats win in the next Presidential election, it would be impossible for them to revise the tariff. What revision of the tariff is made will be done by the people who believe in a tariff, not by those who are theoretical free-traders, even though they did not have the spunk to enact a free-trade law, or one which did anything but embarrass manufacturing industries, when they had he opport unity.

Railroad controlled Senator Martin of Virginia is becoming famous as a giver of interviews on national subjects. The habit has become so pronounced with him during the last ninety days that he is being strongly talked of for Democratic national chairman in place of Hon. James K. Jones, of Arkansas, recently retired from the Senate. Mr. Martin's latest blast at the Republicans is to the effect that while he believes the Northern Securities decision is a blow at the trusts, yet there are many other trusts in the country, and as the matter of their prosecution lies with the Administration, it is not likely in his judgment that they will be troubled sufficiently to afford the suffering people of the United States much, if any relief. This ipterview is fully up to the Jamesjones standard.

Germany proposes to keep abreast of American agriculture by sending over a party of fifty eminent practical and scientific agriculturalists to make an extensive tour of American farming and fruit growing sections. Advanced agents have been spying out these lands and have forwarded a report to Germany advising the party how to prepare for the American invasion. In summer, the report states, "the American wears light trousers, a leather belt, a shirt and a light jacket Only at festival dinners are evening clothes worn," and advice is given that the party bring its own cigars as nothing smokable in this line can be had in the United States for less than ten cents.

Perhaps the American idea would be that fifty large Dutch meerschaum pipes and a bale or two of tobacco would meet the latter demand.

In the matter of the trouble in the Post Office Department, it seems that the methods of auditing are antiquated and entirely inadequate, so insufficient that far greater scandals than the present one are constantly invited—the Post Office Department is an enormous machine—and also that the defects have been called repeatedly to the attention of Congress, officially with recommendation for the adoption of new methods. Auditor Castle of the Department has again and again urged Congress's attention to the "notoriously defective methods" in use, but that august body has not heeded. With such a great organization as the Post Office Department of the United States, having annual money transactions of a billion dollars, the most up-to-date methods should have long since been provided, and changed from time to time as the necessity demanded.

The proposition made at the International Agricultural Congress now in session at Rome for an European tariff combine against the United States seems somewhat nonsensical. Germany buys more of this country than she sells to but her purchases are nearly all of material which she must have for factories; Italy sells to us little that could not purchase elsewhere whereas she buys chiefly raw cotton, oil and unmanufactured tobacco which she could not get elsewhere; France sold us last year thirteen million dollars more of goods than she bought from us and she could not afford to lose that market; Great Britain depends upon us for her food supply and would not entertain such a proposition and Austria trades but little with us and mostly in products which she could not get elsewhere.

We shall continue to supply the world with our agricultural and manufactured products and make money out of other countries, and they will continue to be glad to sell us what things we need.

A few editors now and then, break forth into calamitous wails over the condition of the country. Dispepsia must be a potent factor in such cases, for certainly the United States has never been in better physical and mental condition than it is today. The Boston Post takes occasion to point out that apparently strikes indicate anything but prosperity. It dwells at length on the number and extent of the strikes now on and wants to know if "this looks like prosperity"—the unexampled prosperity Secretary Root in his Boston speech and President Roosevelt in Milwaukee said that we should probably have with us indefinitely if we did not open up the tariff question.

As a matter of fact strikes are always more or less associated with prosperity. Strikes come at all times, both as a result of hard times and along with good ones, but there is a vast difference in the causes. The strikes of the last Cleveland regime were the sullen protests of labor against the reduction of wages, made by manufacturers because the people would not buy their products and there was no money being made; today the manufacturers and the captains of industry are coining money and labor strikes for increased wages—what it believes to be its share of the in adding wealth.

It is difficult to see what satisfaction is obtained from calamity howling at this time.

The Cigarette in Spain

We did not fully realize the heinousness of the crime of cigarette smoking until we visited Spain and investigated the question of the effects upon the Spanish race, writes Mrs. John A. Logan in the Evening Bulletin. We went through many manufactories and studied the people who made them, and later the people who smoked them. We have never seen greater evidence of moral degeneracy than was furnished by the hundreds of women in Spanish cigarette factories sitting on low chairs beside low tables rolling cigarettes and at the same time rocking the cradles that held their children, their black hair tastefully arranged with a flower on the side as if out for a holiday, their smiling faces and saucy manners expressing reckless indifference to their positions and the evidences of their immorality. The people everywhere seemed dwarfed, poorly fed and generally degenerate as they sat about the resorts of the profligate and the indolent It was evident to us that if the government had prohibited the manufacture of cigarettes before it became a national occupation and misfortune, Spain might not have reached its present state of deterioration. The sooner Cuba discourages the industry and checks the enormous consumption of tobacco on the island, the sooner will the people begin an age of progression and advancement in civilization. The government of the United Stated should also take alarm at the frightful increase of the pernicious cigarette smoking habit and cause laws to be enacted and executed that will spare the American nation, particularly the youth of our country, from the inevitable decadence that surely follows addiction to this monstrous vice.

"Some Women Who Prefer Dogs."

In the current number of Collier's Weekly there is a double-page illustration by Charles Dana Gibson. It would be pleasing to be able to affirm that all the work done by Mr. Gibson is good, but the truth will not permit this. The picture in question is not in any respect good, but the chief objection to it is that it is unfair. The illustration bears the caption used above. It shows an interior of no particular significance, in the foreground there are two figures. The first is an angular female, the typical old maid, holding upon her scant space of lap a long-eared dog. The other figure is that of an old woman, distinctly matronly in appearance, who shelters within her arms a scared looking child, who shows an inclination to shy at the old maid and the dog as though in fear that one or the other might bite. On the face of the canine and its mistress there is an expression extremely grim.

Now there is no such thing as the typical old maid Many women remain single. Some of them do this from choice, and others because of circumstances that do not leave them any choice. If a woman desires to get married, and has no notable attraction of beauty or wealth, she may fail to bring to the attention of the other sex a realization of her worth. Modesty and custom forbid that she make the overtures. A man may be lame, halt, blind, ornery in every fiber, a tyrant and a brute, and yet if he is intent upon securing a wife he can do so. He cannot by any means secure his pick, but he can easily get somebody far too good for him. Of the women who reach middle life unmated there is not a solitary, vinegary type such as Gibson has set forth. The spinster may be jolly, happy, an excellent friend, a wise adviser. It may be that her heart is warm, her charity broad. She may be more than merely welcome in the home of brother or sister where she is beloved of the little ones to whom she is the ever-patient auntie. Often she is the stay and comfort of aged parents, and for the sake of these parents it is not uncommon for her to have sacrificed her own desires. In frequent cases the bachelor girl glories in her independence, but, of course, there may come a time when she will relinquish this.

Artist Gibson has no right to characterize the spinster who has a dog as one who prefers a dog to a child. It is within her power to possess the dog, and children, over whom her heart may yearn, have been denied her. The instinct of affection, the longing for companionship, finds expression in the petting of a brute. Similarly it may find this outlet in caring for a garden of roses Surely the one who would rather have the friendship of a dog than to be utterly alone is not to be blamed for this. Nor is it fair to assert of such a one that she would have chosen the dog and neglected her own flesh and blood, had the gift of matrimony fallen to her lot.—Tacoma Ledger.

Mrs. Hogan: 'Ooh! Me man hez th' most tirrible noightmares! He do be puffing, an' shtarting, an' jumping, an' groaning the hull blessed noight!" Mrs. Grogan: "Ooh! Ut moost be noight autermobiles he has!"

CALL THE ROLL PLEASE

Lansdale Republican.

The Salus libel bill, which was rushed through the Legislature last week is meeting with violent opposition from all newspaper publishers of the State. If Gover nor Pennypacker signs it he will greatly disappoint the newspaper fraternity, who have been unstinting in giving praise to him where praise has been due.

SOW THAT YE MAY REAP.

Sellerville Herald.

This Springtime desire for a place to dig and plant for a home wherein the sun shines all day long and the breezes can always find a window to enter when wanted, has led many a man to buy a plot of ground and build upon it. And where the choice has been wisely and well made, the later years have brought such enhancement of value in the land itself as to give the prudent buyer independent means.

CHARLIE'S ON THE WAR-PATH.

Perkasie News

With the "majority" of the Pennsylvania Legislature we are disgusted five feet eight and one half inches deep and move that it be dented the right to meet in biennial session for twenty five years. It acts like a drunken man with a loaded pistol The element which has some sense and statesmanship hasn't enough votes to accomplish anything. Lout, lunacy and license distinguish the session, from the bill presented by Lickspittle Pusey, past the cigarette law conceived in bad faith and only by cumulative public sentiment forced to passage, up to the Grady libel bill, born for spite and blackmail.

CLAYTON'S FAITH IS JARRED.

Jenkintown Times Chronicle.

We are sorry to know that our Senator and members of the Legislature voted for such a foolish proposition as the Salus-Grady libel bill, now before the Governor. When a man can recover damages for having his feelings hurt by publishing his name in the paper it is a sign our government is retrograding The people will lose interest in the newspapers, because it will be difficult to say anything of worth without some one suing for libel, and of course people do not run papers to lose money. The proposition has shaken our confidence in the men back of such a preposterous scheme. We do not believe Governor Pennypacker will sign it, and should not be surprised if it would be the political death-knell to some of our rising statesmen in this county.

THE "NORTH AMERICAN" PRESS LEAGUE OF BUCKS AND MONTGOMERY COUNTIES.

Doylestown Intelligencer.

A majority of the members of the Press League of Bucks and Montgomery counties are publishers of weekly newspapers. These members do not come within the scope of the proposed new libel law. Still, almost to a man, they strenuously oppose the bill and urge the Governor to apply his veto. Should the bill be approved by the Governor the Lansdale Reporter, for example, could publish cartoons and a whole lot of matter not objectionable to the present law But the Daily Intelligencer would not dare to admit such matter in its columns. We might print it in our weekly edition, however. The whole thing seems ridiculous on its face.

THERE'LL BE NO WRECK IN HATFIELD.

Hatfield Times

We must confess, that, if the present libel bill becomes a law we pity the dailies, but as far as the little country weekly is concerned we see no reason for them to help place a club in some one else's hand to knock off their own heads. It's the dailies fight, not the little country weekly, therefore, dailies fight it out, and we know that no one will rejoicee more in your victory, or symathize with you if you loose, than the little country weekly; but, hereafter, Mr. Daily, don't look at the little country as you have in the past, but give him the hand of friendship, and when you get into trouble, he will help you, for as a rule, the little country weekly is run by a big hearted, broad minded man, one who knows how to sow good seeds to get a good crop, and never expects to grow roses from a thorn bush.

THE HOE VS THE PLOW.

Doylestown Republican.

The Trenton Times is authority for the statement that Bucks county asparagus is the best in the market and many farmers in the lower end of the county are making a specialty of asparagus, some devoting several acres to the crop It is along this line that the farmer can best compete with the West, which he is unable to do successfully by growing staple crops. And it is here that special and advanced instruction in the science of agriculture will profit him It is said that John Burroughs, author, ornithologist and botanist, now companion of President Roosevelt on his Western trip, made a thousand dollars from a small celery patch established on land especially adapted to the growth of the plant. It was his knowledge of botany that enabled the naturalist to make his enterprise profitable. Burroughs with his hoe made more money than many farmers are able to make on a hundred acre tract with hired labor and machinery.

A BILLIOUS ATTACK.

Doylestown Democrat.

The Republican administration we are blessed or cursed with is making an energetic play for the support of the Wall street plutocrats through the financial operations of the secretary of the treasury. At the same time it is begging the people to wait patiently while the inactive attorney general curbs the bad trusts. The utmost diligence is being used by Secretary Shaw in attending to his end of the political wire pulling, for Wall street is insistent that all the treasury can give is badly needed. The people are as impatient as the bankers for relief, but there does not seem to be the same agility displayed by Mr Knox in behalf of the people as Mr. Shaw is putting forth for the bankers J. Pierpont Morgan, the king of finance, had but to call at the White House and the treasury the other day and tell the distress that prevailed in Wall street, when thereupon measures were taken to relieve the financial situation. Secretary Shaw at once announced that the treasury would refund $100,000,000 of outstanding bonds and pay the holders a large premium to allow him to do so and in their place issue new bonds.

APPLIES TO LAST COUNTY CONTEST.

Lansdale Reporter.

We believe many good and honest but sensitive men are kept out of public life just because of the ridicule that is sure to be heaped upon them by opposition papers were they to aspire to place of public trust. This is not right. To our mind so called metropolitan journalism is getting just a little too swift for good morals and good government. No one takes exception to fair and honorable criticism, but certain papers have confused liberty of the press with license to abuse and cartoon—sometimes for revenge, sometimes merely for the fun of the thing. There are some features about the Salus bill the Reporter doesn't fancy (for instance "damages for physical and mental suffering"), but like the fellow who was caught in bad company, we suppose it must stand for a share of the punishment intended for those papers who have thus offended the public sense We all stand for clean government—why not stand for clean journalism. The Reporter doesn't want to be bell sheep in this matter, but it certainly approves in a measure the purposes of the new libel bill; and as it doesn't want to be misrepresented by any self-appointed Press League committee who may go to Harrisburg next week, it fairly states its position at this time.

BOOM AT BUSTLETON.

JOHN M. MACK INTERESTED IN THE PROGRESS—NEW RAILROAD AND MODERN BOULEVARD DESTROY TRANQUILITY

After slumbering uninterruptedly for more than two centuries Bustleton has become the centre of a wonderful activity which makes her name appropriate The confirmed quiet of generations has been dealt a rude blow by the energy of twentieth century progress.

A ukase from the Czar of all the Russia's commanding an imperial ouly to rise on the marshes of the Neva could not have revolutionized the feeling of Bustleton more completely than have happenings of the last few days. Forces are irresistibly at work moving the little suburb into a new order of things.

Until now Bustleton has been left to work out her own destiny in her own fashion The great outside world gave no thought to her. She rested tranquilly, her good citizens living in their little homes grouped about the old Baptist Meeting House, built in 1687. No one cared to go there, and her people were quite content that it should be so. The old dirt road to Torresdale and Fox Chase was neither worse nor better than it had been since Washington was at Valley Forge, Bustleton lived within itself, and every one was happy. No great contrasts of wealth and poverty caused a grumble of dissatisfaction.

A few miles away, in the direction of the Delaware river, magnificent express trains rushed on, speeding between two great cities. From the other side also was heard the shriek of the locomotive, but both railroads were far enough away not to frighten the shrewd citizens of Bustleton. The village slept on, and the present generation had every thought to hand down to posterity even as it had been inherited from the last

Now all is changed. With the enthusiasm of novelty Bustletonians are talking of the "boom times" which have befallen the town. Everybody is asking and wondering. "What next?" The very suddenness of the descent of progress upon the place has disarmed the time honored hostility to things new. Many who a month ago would not sell for love nor money, have all at once developed the commercial spirit of the day. They desire to sell only at the highest price obtainable

The first attack upon Bustleton developed recently when a party of railroad surveyors went through and drove stakes for a new line, which the Philadelphia and Reading Railway proposes to build across the town. The stakes, with nails driven in their tops and strange red chalk marks upon them, were viewed suspiciously but their meaning was not grasped

Then arrived a man who called to see those who had land along the line of the stakes and casually asked if he could not buy a field or a meadow or even the homestead.

That man showed himself willing to pay a good sum in cash for a receipt containing an agreement to sell Before the town pump was aware of it, Murray, Lott, Dedaker, Young, McLaughlin, Pierson, Fetter, De Kalb and about fifteen more had sold part or all of their farms

In the meantime John M. Mack had conceived the 80 foot wide Torresdale boulevard. City Councils had not time to place that driveway and the electric road route upon its plans before more than 1000 acres of land were picked up along the line near Bustleton. Part of that land lies where a prospective park is marked. Saul sold some of his truck garden, and Conn, Wilson, Griffith and a few more were induced to sell and get out of the way of the Torresdale boulevard

Then, only a few days ago, an ordinance was passed to widen Grant avenue, extending from Bustleton to Torresdale to 100 feet That, despite its high sounding name, is one of the two old dirt roads mentioned as relics of the past A score of land owners will be obliged to accept the city's dollars in exchange for pieces of their ground, which will be condemned for that widening process.

John M Mack has some property along Grant avenue, and must yield with the rest, but he, a present day city business man, is probably not disturbed over that, as Bustletonians naturally are And to make things still more lively in Bustleton, Philadelphia lawyers young in practice, are going there to show how damage suits can be fostered

The Beginning of Freemasonry.

The present name Free and Accepted Mason, with the ceremonies and government date back to further than the beginning of the eighteenth century, yet it must not be inferred that Freemasonry originated at such recent times. When first instituted, or by whom, is absolutely unknown. It undoubtedly preserves the last vestige of the Eleusinian mysteries, the grand religious system of the pagan world, before the dawn of Christianity.

These were established in Greece at least 1,500 years before our era. The Essenians were a weak branch with peculiar national modifications.

The story of the Masonic fraternity founded at the building of Solomon's Temple with the phraseology thus made appropriate, is a modern attempt to give a new garb, acceptable to Christians, to the old forms

In an age of densest ignorance, without books or any means of gaining knowledge except orally, surrounded by enemies, it was of great benefit for selected persons to band themselves together, under sacred vows of mutual protection, and protection of those dependent, as wives and daughters and by mystic ceremonies instruct in the most profound morality. In these brotherhoods the priests and rulers led and the societies exerted the most powerful influence over the destinies of the ancient nations; nor is its present power to be underestimated. The Masonic fraternity of the world numbers 3,000,000. Widely varying as are the rules of seventy nine different national and racial lodges or powers, they all have a common purpose; the realization of a high form of moral conduct and fraternal helpfulness. Masonry in its Christian garb is a tame presentation of the splendors of the ceremonies of the ancient mysteries performed in the vast halls of rock-hewn temples, where every device the ingenuity of man could devise contributed to awaken awe and overwhelm with fear in the trembling initiate.

It may be said without fear of contradiction, that no ritual can be written for any secret society without drawing its vital forms from Masonry. It occupies the entire field, and the countless societies which have started in rivalry have been only weak imitations. The secrets and every word of the ritual of Masonry have meanings, which date to periods remote at the advent of the Christian era —Hon. Henry Smith, in the Progressive Thinker.

Rusher: "Did you ever go to Bins, the tailor?" Crusher: "Yes. Got two suits from him—one dress suit, one lawsuit. Very expensive man."

He: "Mrs. Wise seems to understand how to manage her husband pretty well." She: "Yes; she lets him have her own way in everything."

The New Man in Town.

I don't profess to be a florist but can raise more than "trash," as a party made that remark. The party that made that remark, if the shoe fits they can wear it, and if it is small for them come to me and I will willingly help to put it on. The Bristol people are invited to come and examine my "trash" and if they patronize me this year, I have the privilege of putting up a greenhouse in the back lot two hundred feet long then I will go in the business right and will then be able to raise plenty of "trash". I also have a fine lot of tomato, pepper, cabbage and lettuce plants for sale raised from good stock, now ready. I am not high priced. See sign in front. I will also have my flowers and plants for sale at Mrs Ablee's, 237 Mill street. After Decoration Day I will give plants for all sizes of empty flower pots. Good bye,

An Eye For an Eye.

Laugh at the world or be laughed at,
Frown or it frowns on you,
For the wicked old earth from the time of its birth
Has exacted travail as its due.

Sing if you aim to be pitied,
Sigh if you want to be scorned,
For the echoes rebound to the mock joyful sound
Of indifference, by envy suborned

Be glad and your fellows take umbrage;
Be sad, they regard you askance,
There are those to assign for good fortune of thine
Such fell reasons as malice advance.

There is room in the halls of pleasure,
But we would we alone were there,
And ere by one we have all passed on
To a narrow, selfish care

For the smiles we fain would scatter,
And the hand we would fain reach out
Is an impulse we live and learn to see
Unrequited and put to rout.

And betrayals have oft been our portion
For the kindness we would bestow.
So away with pretense, out of pure self defense
We must mete out woe for woe
—Sing Sing Prison Star of Hope.

The Nation's Prayer.

God of our fathers, Lord of All,
Who sits on justice for a throne,
Both right and might are thine alone,
Beseechingly on thee we call

Forbid that greed should vanquish right,
That haughty power and selfish lust
Should strangle justice Thou art just;
Let justice triumph by thy might.

Save us from foolish men and blind
Who sell their souls to save a cause
And trample underfoot the laws
Thou hast decreed for all mankind.

Have mercy on the few who hold
The million a welfare in their hand,
Who fail to see or understand
That justice pays a thousandfold.

And pity, Lord, as pity's thine,
The arrogance that mounts a throne
And robbing thee of what a thine own
Proclaims it rules by right divine

Let caste and class be checked again,
And ranks and orders, let them pass,
And let us looking at the mass,
Find beings God has made for men.

And give us patience to command
The faith to hope that right at last
Will triumph Till the storm is past
Let reason lead us by the hand

The burden of our brother's wrong
By fellow feeling let us learn
And if allowed this one return
Help us to suffer and be strong
—Chicago News.

At the Start.

Young man,
What is your plan
Of progress? Are you
Going to pull through,
Or will you lie down in the road
And let your load
Sink you out of sight
In the mud?
Have you white
Blood,
And pale,
That curdles at the hard word "Fail"
And dares not face
The chances of the race
Or have you red clear red,
The good strong color
All the great have shed
In deed or thought
For every triumph wrought
Out of what seemed full
Of the impossible?
Have you the nerve
To serve
Until you can be master? To wait
And work outside the gate
Until you win
The strength to open it and enter in?
Have you the heart to meet
Defeat
Day after day
And yet hold the way
That upward leads
And must needs
Be hard and rough
To make man tough
Of sinew and of soul
Before he sees the goal,
So, when it is attained,
He shall have strength to hold
What he has gained,
And use it so
That it to greater good shall grow?
Young man,
Think on these things
What each one brings
Is as you choose it.
You may take
The stake
Or you may lose it.
Start in
To win
And keep straight in the way
Unflagging to the end.
Whatever it may be
Is victory
—William J Lampton in Success.

A Trinity of Blessings.

I thank thee God, for these,
My trinity of blessings
A seeing eye, the open door
Through which my soul looks out
And grows more glad
At every glowing sky and opening flower;
For ears that hear thy music
Alike in speech of friends or song of birds
Or man made harmonies of sound
By thee inspired
And lastly, God for this I thank thee—
A heart through thee
Made friend to all humanity,
A heart of understanding, swift to read
In all the beauty of the world
Thy message of eternal love'

Small Stations to Go.

While there has been no authoritative information upon the subject, it has been stated by railroad men that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will in the near future abandon a number of small stations between Germantown Junction and Trenton. The closing of the Ridge Avenue and Englewide stations, it is alleged, is the first move in that direction. Stations that are booked for closing are said to be Penn Valley, Wheat Sheaf, Tullytown, Edgely, Eddington, Andalusia, Cornwells Wissinoming and Bridesburg. It has long been claimed that the local train service is not a paying one, and the competition of the trolleys has taken a great deal of the patronage from the steam road. There is practically no traffic by the Pennsylvania road between Bristol and Morrisville since the operation of the new street railway line.

Hargreaves Circus Coming.

Honestly conducted with nothing said or done to offend the most fastidious, has always been the motto of the Hargreaves' Big Railroad Shows and for that reason these monster Shows have been growing larger and larger each year. The limit has been reached this year, however, as the shows are now of such a size that it is difficult to find lots big enough to get up the huge stretch of canvas required to show all the wonders carried by these Shows This accounts for the fact that these Shows only exhibit in one or two towns in this section as the proprietors will not under any circumstances abridge the performance in any way, will not cut out one feature but will always give all that they advertise or not show in any town where they cannot It is coming to Bristol, Pa, Tuesday, April 28 with all its wonders, with all its glories, with the quadruple combination of colossal circus, mammoth museum millionaire menagerie and real Roman hippodrome and notwithstanding the magnitude of the enterprise and the enormous expense incurred by carrying it, but one price of admission will be charged to see it all A glorious pageant of all the glittering novelties and numerous wonders will be given on the morning of the exhibition which all can see free of charge

The New Ballot Act

The ballot bill so long before the Legislature, and which was finally passed, during the waning days of the session, provides for grouping the names of the candidates under the title of the office for which they have been nominated. No name will be printed more than once, but the name of each party making the nomination will be attached to the candidate.

Provision for straight party voting by a single mark is made in the first column on the ballot. The name of each party is printed in a line by itself with a square at the right of it A mark in the square opposite the name Republican carries a vote for every candidate having a regular Republican nomination, and the same with other parties If candidates of more than one party are to be voted for they must be picked out individually and their names marked separately.

But One Color.

President Cassatt, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, has issued orders that will result in changing the color of the entire equipment of their trains, such as the Pennsylvania Limited and Congressional Limited to the standard color of red, thus doing away with the tri-color, the limited having been cream and dark green. The Pullman Company now paints all its cars running on the Pennsylvania Railroad red, to harmonize with that road's standard color.

Detective Vietch furnished the bonds and the men were released from custody.

Judicial Candidates

It is generally accepted that there will be a Republican nomination for President Judge in Bucks county this year but whether the candidate shall be nominated at a separate judicial convention or the regular county convention is a matter that will have to be decided by the County Committee at its meeting on Saturday. In 1883 Judge Watson was nominated by the county convention and Judge Yerkes by a judicial convention. In 1893, it will be remembered, the Republican judicial convention decided that it was inexpedient to nominate a Republican candidate, but the county convention took a different view of the matter and nominated General Fisher in opposition to Judge Yerkes, who was nominated by a judicial convention.

This question will be one for the Republican County Convention to decide when it holds its meeting to fix upon the date of holding the convention to elect delegates to the State convention, which meets May 27th.

It is a foregone conclusion among both Democrats and Republicans that Judge Harman Yerkes will be the Democratic nominee for Judge, if he will accept, but the Republicans are not so positive of their candidate. There is practically a unanimous expression in favor of Henry Lear, Esq., as the Republican nominee, but Mr. Lear has not, so far as is known, even intimated that he would accept the position if it was offered by his party, and is not a candidate for the honor. Other Republicans spoken of in this connection are Henry O. Harris, Esq., and Mahlon H. Stout, Esq., both being well qualified for the office.

Shooting Tournaments.

The Bristol Gun Club held its second bi-monthly shoot for the Grundy cup at the club grounds, Laurel Bend, on last Saturday afternoon. Although the scores were not very high yet the match was interesting throughout. Fifeen members participated in the match, the conditions being the same as on former occasions—sixteen yard rise, unknown angles. At the end of the first series Jesse McLaughlin and William Ratcliffe tied on five birds, but at the close of the second series McLaughlin was one bird in the lead. Fred Nevegold tied with McLaughlin on twelve birds at the end of the third series. The final series was really a contest between McLaughlin and Nevegold, with the remaining contestants fighting for third place McLaughlin broke four out of his five birds but Nevegold went to pieces, breaking only one bird McLaughlin was therefore declared the winner having broken sixteen out of twenty targets. The score follows:

Big Canning Factory for Newtown.

Already over $3000 worth of stock for the canning factory that is proposed for Newtown has been subscribed and the committee in charge of securing additional subscriptions feels much encouraged by the prompt responses already secured, that the new project is to be a 'go" from the start and Newtown is thus to have an industry that will have a large influence on the immediate community.

The capital stock will probably be made $12,000, of which it is estimated that about $10,000 will be required in the construction of the plant itself and its proper equipment. Not more than five shares, at a par value of $100 each, are to be held by any one stockholder. The committee that is looking after the soliciting of stock includes George C. Worstall, Walter S. Wright, Newtown; Spencer W. Hibbs, Hulmeville; William P. Davis, Reading; A. B McKensie, Lebanon.

The desirability of having the farmers themselves buy the stock, instead of selling it to the business men of the town, is being urged. If the farmer has the money invested he will not fail to raise produce to assist in keeping the plant in operation. He thus receives payment for his produce and interest upon the money he has invested in the plant.

Attention is called to the fact that there will thus be no middlemen's profits between the farmer and the purchaser of his produce. Most factories at the present time find it most profitable to sell to the trust, but this would not be necessary if better price could be obtained elsewhere.

The farmers around Reading claim that they get better prices for their propuce at the factory than they can by delivering direct to customers in the city of Reading. Half a cent is laid aside upon each can sold from the factory with which to pay the dividends upon the stock invested. During the past year this concern has paid 6 per cent, interest to investors, besides leaving a surplus of material over to the succeeding year amounting to about 6 per cent.

If the plans do not fail, Newtown may expect a factory, within a year which will utilise the apples, tomatoes, pumpkins, peas, etc., of the neighborhood, and give employment to from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty hands.

Mr. and Mrs. Bergen believed in higher education for women, or, as they told each other, "We will give Katie the chances we didn't have."

Katie was a wild, awkward slip of a girl who wept salt tears when her destiny was unfolded. She never, never would go off to that eastern college. She would die of homesickness. Mrs. Bergen quite melted at the picture, but her husband was firm. It was best for her to go, and go she did.

But the energy that had made her childhood a perilous one flowed readily into the new channels. The first month found her contented, the second enthusiastic. The letters which told of quizzes, exams and profs grew more and more unintelligible to the two old people. She was living in a world into which they could not enter. Even as they thrilled with pride in her attainments they felt a strange pang, as if their firstborn were being gradually stolen and a changeling left in her place.

What with the weary length of the four winters, the brevity of the summer vacations and their inevitable absorption in visits to college chums they felt that the week after commencement brought her back to them almost a stranger.

She was certainly no longer the little Katie who had gone away in tears. Miss Katharyn Bergen was a tall, self possessed young woman who wore eyeglasses and clothes of a masculine cut.

Mr. Bergen was secretly aggrieved at sight of the eyeglasses. "When she had the makin' of such a pretty girl," he said mournfully to himself, "an' mother an' I havin' such good sight at our age!" He felt that it was a high price to pay for learning.

Mrs. Bergen was shocked by her daughter's taste in clothes. Her stiff collars and hideous vests, the scantiness and brevity of her skirts and her pronounced fancy for shoes of the most broad toed and thick soled variety were all thorns in the motherly bosom. She was, however, a woman of discretion. She recognized in her daughter much of a certain obstinacy which long familiarity with Mr. Bergen had taught her to respect. So she made no comment on the distressing changes.

What she did not say Scotville did. Katharyn was more than a nine days' wonder; she was a perpetual volcano. She had lost none of her original energy; rather it had increased by practice. The town needed to be uplifted, and her hand was ready for the work.

So Scotville was introduced to that new creation, a woman with a purpose, and was not overpleased. Her old girl friends detected an undercurrent of patronizing in all her advances and refused to enthuse over her. The men who had been boon companions in her tomboy days declared that a jolly good fellow had been changed into a prig and voted her schemes for elevation as all tommyrot. She scandalized the old minister who had baptized her when a baby by her open avowal of agnostic beliefs.

Jack Selwyn tried in vain to stem the rising tide of antagonism, but then every one knew it was only because he was too loyal to desert his old sweetheart. Jack had not been able to go to college. There were the young brothers and sisters to whom he had to play a father's part. So he had turned to work as an antidote for longing for the unattainable and was now Mr. Bergen's right hand man. It was even whispered that his employer would have been glad to welcome a nearer relationship.

It seemed, however, that Katharyn had no memory of the promises whispered by a certain Katie. To be sure, there had been a look in her face when he greeted her on her day of homecoming that had sent his heart up into his throat. Perhaps it was not as he had feared; she had not grown beyond his reach. But the succeeding days had brought only disillusionment. The girl, smarting under the almost universal rebuffs of her well meant efforts, classed him ruthlessly among the ranks of her opponents.

If she missed their old time confidences, their happy talks on men and books, she gave no sign. Instead she withdrew more closely into herself.

Her rooms were on the ground floor of the Bergen homestead. There she sat and read or mused bitterly long after she had said "Good night." From her windows the lawn sloped down gently to the river. Often when her head grew weary she would slip out quietly to breathe the freshness of the night.

One evening the moonlight had lured her from her books. The strains of a violin came, softened by distance. All Scotville was at a dance—all but she, and she had refused. Her paltry excuse had been that she and her mother had promised to spend the night at an old aunt's in the country during her father's absence on a business trip, but sudden indisposition had kept them from going, and now Katharyn hurried down the river path, as if to escape the witching sound.

She had wandered farther than she knew when a cry broke the stillness: "Fire! Fire!" She turned and ran back dizzily. Swift intuition told her that the column of smoke and flame rose from her own home. Scotville thought all the family were away. There would be no one to waken and save her mother.

As she panted up the lawn she saw confusedly a string of people. They were passing buckets. These girls in filmy ball gowns (the girls she had patronized), these men in immaculate evening dress (the men she had frowned on), were fighting to save her home. But there was no sign of her mother.

One wing was ablaze, while smoke poured from every window of the main building. Perhaps it was too late.

With a cry of anguish she broke through the inner circle of figures and before they were aware of her presence had darted up the steps and disappeared into the smoke.

A wave of heat as from a furnace met her as she dashed up the stairs. Sparks from the burning landing above rained down upon her head, but she flung open the door of her mother's room and staggered to the bed. The room was empty.

She turned back blindly toward the door. Smoke whirled in upon her, choking, suffocating. The very walls seemed to flash into flame.

She fell forward.

She awoke to the delicious coolness of water dashed upon her. As she opened her teary eyes two anxious faces bent over her. One was her mother's, pale with terror, but untouched by smoke or flame. The other—she recognized it in spite of burned and blackened skin and singed hair; it was Jack's.

With a little sigh of content she closed her eyes again. These two that she loved best were safe. Yes, she acknowledged it to herself now she loved Jack Selwyn.

And he had saved her. She had felt his strong arm catch her when she fell. After all the months of her studied unkindness he had risked his life to save hers. She had been blind indeed, but she had read her heart in the light of the flames.

Now she put out her hand timidly. "Jack," she whispered softly.

He seized her cold little hand in his. "What is it, Katie?" he asked, his voice trembling with newborn hope that seemed too good to be true.

And when she opened her eyes and gazed up at him trustingly he knew that love had conquered pride and that the sweetheart of childish days was his to have and hold forevermore.

POINTS ABOUT TURTLES.

They Are Not So Much Like One Another as Many People Think.

In moist places in the fields and meadows may be found the wood tortoise, a sober sort of turtle of a brown or reddish brown color above, the shell having a ridge in its middle along the back, says Nature Study. Each plate of the shell underneath has a black blotch.

In mud holes and in small ponds, often resting on a log or stone above the water, one may almost always find the painted turtle, which has the margin of the shell marked red, while the shell underneath is yellow. These turtles are not so easily captured as the wood turtles, for they are rather timid and often slip into the water when approached, but with patience and ingenuity they can be outwitted at last and one secured for examination.

It will be rare good fortune to find a turtle at a meal and see him hold his food, sometimes with one fore foot, sometimes with the other, but never with both at once, as cats and dogs often do.

After watching him for awhile try to find whether he always draws his tail in on the same side of his box house. Experiment with the same turtle over and over; then sometimes try other turtles in the same way and find out for yourself whether turtles vary in this matter of hiding away their tails. This is more important than you can imagine. If all the animals and plants of the same sort were always the same there would never be any change in the living world.

Count the toes on the fore feet and on the hind feet, noticing whether there are the same number all around. As you find other turtles, particularly in different parts of the country, if you travel about, or in such museums as you can visit, see what differences you can find in this matter of the number and arrangement of turtles' toes. It is not so silly as it may appear to some people. Notice also that some turtles have webbed feet, to enable them to swim the better.

Manage in some way to open the turtle's mouth and find whether it has teeth, or only hard and rather sharp cutting edges along the jaws. Touch the eyes gently with a small stick and see the turtle draw a thin skin over them. This is the third eyelid, the same as in hens, pigeons and birds generally. Notice that the feet and tail are covered with scales; then some time examine the foot of a hen or pigeon and see that they are scaly also. In this matter of the third eyelid and the scales the birds and the turtles have features in common. Perhaps some time you will learn how it happened and will find it a very interesting story.—New York Tribune.

Appropriating a Crest.

There is a restaurant keeper with a new and capacious place on the upper west side about whom a story is going the rounds. This "mine host" makes no secret of the fact that when he arrived in America as a youth he had more fingers and toes than dollars and that it is due to his own industry that he now can command his little army of cooks, waiters and other help. When he opened an addition to his rooms recently, his friends were surprised to see a crest emblazoned conspicuously on various parts of the wall. The glassware also bears the crest.

"I say, Pat," said a friend recently, "where did you get that crest?"

"That belonged to a king of my name in Ireland," was the reply.

"And I suppose you were one of the royal family?"

"Well, I don't know," was the confidential reply. "I looked it up in the Astor library. There were several hundred years to account for, but I thought I'd take a chance."—New York Times.

Finding More Material.

"How large is your Mammoth cave?" asked the foreign tourist.

"Nobody knows exactly," said the native. "It's so large, though, and people get lost in it so easily, that when a man is about to explore it he makes his will and wishes his weeping friends goodby."

"Most astonishing! I never heard that before!"

"Oh, well, of course, it isn't quite so bad as that. I was only joking."

[Entry in foreign tourist's notebook: "Another curious custom among Americans is that when they tell an amazing lie they call it a joke."]—Chicago Tribune.

True Mercy.

"Prisoner," said the judge, "you are convicted of bigamy, of having married two wives. Have you any plea for mercy before the sentence of the court is imposed on you?"

"Yes, judge," said the prisoner. "Give me as big a sentence in jail as you can."

"What?"

"I want to keep out of the clutches of those two wives as long as I can, and a long jail sentence will be true mercy."—Baltimore Herald.

Charity.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all. But friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend.

Great men should think of opportunity and not of time. Time is the excuse of feeble minded and puzzled spirits.—Disraeli.

BEET SUGAR.

It Was Born of France's Isolation During the Napoleonic Wars.

Sugar as an article of food was not known to the ancients. Mankind has always exhibited the greatest fondness for sweets, and from the earliest times the demand was supplied by honey.

The royal psalmist sets up honey and the honeycomb as the highest standard of material sweetness. A land flowing with milk and honey was the picture drawn by the most ancient poets to describe an earthly paradise. Romans of the last days of the republic, and subsequently of the time of the empire, who were at the same time the most luxurious epicures and the grossest feeders the world ever knew and spared neither money nor exertion to secure every delicacy possible for their tables, had no knowledge of sugar, but robbed the bees to obtain sweets for their famous honey cakes and other confectionery.

Sugar was made in India and Arabia in the earliest times, but it was not brought into Europe until the invasions of the Mohammedans into the countries around the Mediterranean sea, in the seventeenth century. The Moors cultivated the cane in the countries of north Africa, and they introduced it into Spain. The Spaniards, about 1510, planted sugar canes in their West Indian possessions, whence it spread through Spanish America and into the French province of Louisiana.

The cane was the original source of sugar, and so remained up to the time of the Napoleonic wars in Europe. The ports of France were so closely blockaded by the British fleets that it was impossible to secure sugar from any tropical countries, and Napoleon assembled the chemists in France and commissioned them to discover some means of making sugar out of material found in the country, at the same time offering a large reward. This proceeding resulted in the production of sugar from the beet.—New Orleans Picayune.

There was a cry in the streets. People rushed from their doors and strained their eyes on the struggling balloonist fighting for life. Even the poor, panting sufferer in the sick room was forgotten while the family gazed breathless at this strange tragedy of the air. Then they went back to the sick room to tell of the terrible struggle for life they had just witnessed. It did not occur to them that under their very eyes a more terrible, more pathetic struggle was going on daily.

There can be nothing more pitiful than the struggle the consumptive makes against disease. The greatest help in this struggle is gained by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures obstinate coughs, weak and bleeding lungs, emaciation, and other ailments which if neglected or unskillfully treated find a fatal termination in consumption.

"In 1898 one of my daughters was suffering on account of a severe cough, hectic fever, wasting of flesh and other symptoms of diseased lungs," writes Rev. Joseph H. Pesperman, of Barnum Springs, Iredell Co., N. C. "I promptly gave her Dr. R. V. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery with gratifying success, and she now enjoys excellent health. This being true, I hereby heartily endorse your medicines."

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach, blood and lungs.
